

The poem "Night" by Gabriela Mistral from Chile (1889-1957)

artistic translation by Alice Jane McVan

Focus on this version of the poem.

Night

Sleep, my child, because of you
The western skies their light efface;
There is no glitter save the dew,
Nor any whiteness, save my face.

My little son, because you dream,
The road lies hushed, in peace unfurled,
Nothing murmurs save the stream;
I am alone in a sleeping world.

A slow mist drowns the silent land.
A blue sigh fades in darkening skies;
Like a gentle, soothing hand
Upon the earth a quiet lies.

Not my child alone I've sung,
Cradling him, to easy sleep;
The earth too, as my cradle swung,
Drifted into slumber deep.

(rewritten for a better translation)

Español:

Noche

Mi niño, sueño. Debido a usted, los cielos occidentales borran su luz.
No hay brillo a excepción del rocío ni de ninguna blancura a excepción de mi cara.

Mi pequeño hijo, porque usted sueña, las mentiras del camino hushed, en la paz desplegada.
Nada murmurs a excepción de la secuencia.
Estoy solo en un mundo el dormir.

Una niebla lenta ahoga la pista silenciosa.
Un suspiro azul se descolora en cielos que obscurecen.
Una tranquilidad miente como una mano apacible,
calmante sobre la tierra.

No solamente mi niño tiene I cantado al sueño fácil, mientras que lo acuna.
La tierra mandiló también en slumber
profundamente,
pues mi horquilla hizo pivotar.

(a simplification)

Night

My child, sleep. Because of you,
the western skies erase their light.
There is no glitter except for the dew
nor any whiteness except for my face.

My little son, because you dream,
the road lies quiet, in peace set free.
Nothing makes sound except for the stream.
I am alone in a sleeping world.

A slow mist falls over the silent land.
A blue sigh fades in darkening skies.
A quiet lies like a gentle, soothing hand upon the Earth.

Not only my child have I sung to easy
sleep,
while cradling him.
The earth too drifted into slumber deep,
as my cradle swung.